Howard's Overhead Doors Helps Kentucky Homeowners Get Garage Doors Winter-Ready Ahead of Colder Weather

September 15, 2026

September 15, 2026 -
Howard's Overhead Doors, a family-owned garage door company serving central and eastern Kentucky since 1985, has launched a seasonal effort to help homeowners prepare their garage doors for colder weather. As temperatures begin to drop across the region, the company is emphasizing the importance of inspection and maintenance before winter conditions arrive.

Colder weather can affect the performance of garage doors in several ways. Falling temperatures cause metal components to contract, lubricants to thicken, and springs to become more brittle, all of which can lead to unexpected malfunctions during the coldest months. According to the company, homeowners who address these issues in advance are less likely to experience a door that fails to open or close when winter arrives.

Howard's Overhead Doors garage door contractor services recommend that homeowners take steps such as lubricating moving parts, checking for loose screws, testing the balance of the door, and inspecting weather seals before the season changes. The company notes that professional inspections can identify worn rollers, misaligned tracks, and aging springs that are more likely to fail in cold conditions.

"Garage doors work harder in the winter than most people realize, and small problems that go unnoticed in warmer months can turn into major inconveniences once the temperature drops," said Howard, owner of Howard's Overhead Doors. "Taking the time now to inspect springs, tracks, and seals can prevent a door from freezing in place or breaking down on the coldest day of the year."

The company serves both residential and commercial clients throughout the region and provides installation, replacement, repair, and maintenance services. For homeowners, seasonal maintenance often includes lubrication of moving parts, adjustment of springs and tracks, and evaluation of weather stripping that helps keep cold air out of the garage. Proper sealing can also contribute to more consistent temperatures in attached living spaces.

Howard's Overhead Doors also offers emergency repair services for situations that cannot wait, such as a broken spring or a door that will not close. The company points out that a garage door left open during winter weather can expose stored belongings and vehicles to freezing conditions, making timely repairs a priority during the colder months.

"Preparation is far less costly than an emergency," Howard added. "A door that is properly maintained before winter tends to last longer and operate more smoothly throughout the season, which is what families look for when the weather turns harsh."

Beyond seasonal maintenance, the company installs a variety of residential and commercial door styles, including overhead doors for warehouses and industrial settings, and provides garage door openers. Homeowners considering a replacement before winter can choose from current designs and features related to both function and insulation.

Howard's Overhead Doors is a family-owned and operated company based in Winchester, Kentucky, providing overhead garage door services to central and eastern Kentucky since 1985. The company offers residential and commercial installation, replacement, and repair services and has received multiple Historic Preservation Awards for its work in the region.
